Good Morning!

This last weekend, I had the opportunity to help with the new counselor interview process for a church camp. I think we interviewed more college kids than ever before. It was a long, but very good, day. One of the questions we asked was, “What have you been doing to strengthen your relationship with God?” We received all kinds of answers such as; daily devotionals, prayer, reading the bible, getting connected at church, and joining bible studies. Depending on their answer, the next question was almost a given: “Would you say your faith is stronger now than it was a year ago?” Those who were doing things to strengthen their faith all said they were closer to God, but those who had difficulty answering the first question were unsure about the second.

Your relationship with God is no different than any other relationship; you must work at it. If you don’t talk, communicate, or do things together you grow apart. Throughout the process I couldn’t help thinking we all should be asking ourselves that question on a regular basis, “Am I closer to God than I was a year ago.” If the answer is no, we should ask ourselves, “What am I doing to strengthen my relationship with God?”

Do you need to start reading your bible more, or spend more time in prayer? Do you meet regularly with God’s family? Are you involved in a class or a bible study?

Don’t take your relationship with God for granted. Let’s all continually work on strengthening it.

Luke Bower
